

Gov. Tim Kaine's 2007 holiday safety message

Video: Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine on camera

Audio: With everything going on between now and the end of the year, keeping up with Virginia's alarming increase in traffic fatalities is probably not at the top of your list, but maybe it should be.

Because getting to and from holiday destinations will undoubtedly involve traveling in a vehicle on Virginia's roadways.

So, always buckle-up when heading out to the mall or grocery store and obey speed limits while driving around.

Avoid distractions, and in the spirit of the season, share the road with the thousands of other motorists out there with you.

When leaving the holiday party be sure you or your designated driver is drug- and alcohol-free before getting behind the wheel.

This is a time of year when families and friends should be coming together to celebrate the holidays and cherish the joys of the season, not mourning the death or injury of a loved one in a vehicle crash.
